Subject: To All Employees: Merger Update

It's been more than two weeks since our historic announcement to join forces with The Bank of New York to create a new global market leader. We effectively executed our plan to reach all our key stakeholders beginning on announcement day, and I've logged a lot of miles and meetings since then, talking to important constituents of all types.

Overall, reaction has been very positive from all groups, including our employees, clients, major investors, and government and community leaders. I've held employee meetings in Pittsburgh, Boston, San Francisco and London, which were attended by both Mellon and Bank of New York employees.

Leaders from the two companies are firm in our belief that Mellon and The Bank of New York will grow faster as one company than either could alone. In today's environment, scale matters - from a market penetration, distribution and product/service perspective, as well as expenses, where we will be able to spread our growth investments over a larger base.

Culturally, the merger of our two teams is a strong fit, as we share very similar values of integrity and teamwork. We will work together in the combined company to continue to be No. 1 in client service. We will focus on creating new opportunities for personal and professional growth, develop thoughtful compensation plans to support performance, and maintain clear and consistent internal and external financial reporting.

The Integration Team, led by Steve Elliott and The Bank of New York's Don Monks, has already met twice and is focused on identifying the integration infrastructure, team members and milestones so that our new company can hit the ground running when the merger closes. The team is focused on doing it right through a thoughtful, deliberate and paced integration by losing no customers and providing the best client service.

OneWeb, Mellon's intranet, houses the most comprehensive source of merger information for employees, including frequently asked questions, rules of the road, senior management positions, press releases, fact sheets, archived messages and - beginning in January - integration updates. Click <http://intra.mellon.com/news/merger/index.html> for the latest merger news. And, as always, please submit questions to me about the merger, or any other topic, by sending an e-mail to Ask Bob.

Equally important to our integration success is our commitment to clients that it's business as usual. While a core group will be dedicated to closing the transaction and planning for the integration of our companies, the rest of us will continue to do what we do best - win business, launch new products and services, delight our customers and celebrate our successes.

We're nearing the end of an outstanding year, and I look forward to a new year that holds even greater opportunities. I'll be in touch again soon.
