The following communication was emailed to employees of Sprint:

Dear partners,

Speaking of, it was five months ago when Sprint and T-Mobile announced our intentions to merge. Since then, you've heard from me and Marcelo along with much commentary in the media about why this is such a good deal. Together we can build the best network across the U.S., including rural areas and establish global leadership in 5G; offer unprecedented products and services at lower prices for consumers and businesses; and create thousands of jobs.

I'm excited to invite you to a special edition Town Hall next week with leaders from the T-Mobile team. It will be a great opportunity for you to get to know John Legere, CEO, and Mike Sievert, chief operating officer, and hear their vision for the combined company. ***

Marcelo and I are looking forward to introducing you to the T-Mobile leaders on Oct. 5 in the auditorium on our Overland Park campus, with overflow seating in the Winter Garden. The event, which will be webcast, is scheduled to begin at 10:30 a.m. CDT.

We will have a robust Q&A with all of you, so I highly encourage you to attend in person, at a watch party or online and to ask the questions that are on your mind. We will do our best, but please understand that it is still too early in the process to answer all your questions.

More on the merger

I am in close contact with Marcelo regarding the day-to-day business at Sprint, as well as the merger process.

***

As we previously shared, we formed an Integration Management Office, led by Kevin Crull, our chief strategy officer.

Edgar Filing: SPRINT Corp - Form 425

You also may have seen this week that T-Mobile hired Sunit Patel to lead their merger and integration strategy. Guiding everyone through this process as smoothly as possible is clearly a high priority for both of our companies.

At Sprint, Kevin and the team have been working on integration plans for the past four months. He has assembled a talented team that represents every Sprint function and business, across 30 workstreams.

They are focused on executing all requirements related to Day 0, the day we close the transaction, if approved. And for Day 1 about 60-90 days following the close which is when we would begin marketing and selling an integrated value proposition.

Their objective is to create a new T-Mobile that represents the BEST people, processes, systems and business models from each company.

In addition, Kevin and the IMO team have developed some key objectives for a seamless transition:

Ensure Sprint customers migrating to the new T-Mobile benefit from a better network, a better value proposition and a flawless customer experience.

Ensure for Sprint shareholders that we deliver and exceed all planned synergy benefits from cost and revenue growth.

And, most important, ensure that we reflect Sprint's talent, passion and scrappy competitiveness so our teams are well represented in all HR decisions for the new company.

But I remind you that until closing a decision is expected sometime in the first half of 2019 we must continue to compete as a stand-alone company.

In addition to our integration efforts, there are many regulatory steps we have recently taken and will continue to take. To review:

July 18: A 180-day review period opened by the FCC, allowing individuals, consumer groups, companies and other interested parties to voice support for or opposition to the merger.

Although some opposition was expected, the media have taken note of the strong support from companies and the public that believe the merger would benefit consumers and businesses.

Sept. 11: The FCC paused the 180-day shot clock, citing that it needs more time to review new information, including a network engineering model, the financial basis for the new network build-out, and the economic model.

Given the amount of information we have submitted to the FCC, it was not a surprise that they paused the shot clock.

Sept. 17: Sprint and T-Mobile filed a joint opposition to the comments filed by parties challenging the merger.

TracFone, the nation's largest MVNO with 22 million U.S. customers, wrote to the FCC: TracFone believes that the merger would not only result in more rapid deployment of a nationwide 5G network, but also create a more competitive wholesale marketplace.

This is important because some parties have argued that the merger could reduce competition in the wholesale market. But TracFone is saying the opposite is true.

Oct. 9: This is the deadline for filing replies to our joint opposition. However, because the shot clock is paused, the date may change.

Vonya McCann and the Government Affairs team are working hard in Washington to advocate for the many benefits of the combined company. And, of course, Marcelo, John Saw, chief technology officer, and Dow will continue to meet with officials in Washington.

I believe in this deal so much because of the tremendous consumer benefits it will generate, and combining forces is the right decision for the future of Sprint.

Merging with T-Mobile will create opportunities for you as part of a stronger, more competitive organization. This transaction is the most important merger in U.S. history, and 5G is the single most important American infrastructure project of our lifetime.

***

In addition to our Digital success, I want to give a special shout-out to Robert Hackl and the Leasing and Insurance team for the amazingly efficient way they handled the roll-out of Sprint Complete. Our new comprehensive protection program replaces Total Equipment Protection on select smartphones, tablets and smartwatches. The initial results look quite promising. Let's continue to focus on our top priorities as a company and celebrate our achievements together.
