Lead vs. Retreat

The choice for the future of HP has never been clearer.

We can choose to seize immediate market leadership in key growth areas of the future.

We can choose to build a new HP that is strong, vibrant, adaptive and ready to compete.

Or we can choose a very different path – one of retreat.

This is what the leading opponents of our merger with Compaq ask you to choose.

They offer a slogan, not a strategy. They propose a retreat from the future, and from this great company's best ambitions.

These are, in effect, the lines of retreat our opponents dictate:

Retreat and limit our growth beyond the 4% segment of the printed pages market we already lead – rather than strengthen our entry into new multi-billion dollar digital imaging and digital publishing markets that are tied to the success of our enterprise computing business.

Retreat from market leadership positions in Windows® and Linux servers the fastest-growing segments of the server business (15% and 38%, respectively¹) and limit HP's leadership to the slower-growing UNIX server market (8% annually²).
By merging with Compaq, we become market leaders in all three.

Retreat and relegate HP to the #5 position in enterprise storage, rather than become #1 in enterprise storage.

Retreat and accept the #8 position in IT services – a market growing at 12% with healthy operating margins – rather than become #3 with double the resources and revenues in consulting, support and outsourcing.

Retreat from the PC business by scaling back or shutting down this business altogether, rather than making it healthy and profitable – a business we expect will generate significant cash and a mid-teens return on invested capital.

Retreat from our compact with HP employees who have spent the last 2 1/2 years
refocusing HP, only to go back to the drawing board and start over – as our opposition suggests.

We are at a defining moment in this company's history:

To lead and grow, or retreat?

The Board and management team of HP have made their decision.

We have decided on market leadership, growth and profitability. Now it is time for you to make your decision. We urge you to vote for the merger of HP and Compaq.
